When Citadel Investment Group chose a mover, they knew that they needed to find a service provider that could handle the high-tech needs of their leading edge IT equipment, their trading desks, and protect their expensive new furnishings, while keeping to a tight schedule so their employees could minimize downtime. They were moving over 600 employees into 250,000 square feet, and needed to be up and running on time. Citadel chose relocation consultants The Carter Group to manage the relocation project for them, and after a careful interview process, Boyer-Rosene was selected to handle the move.

Dearborn Center—131 S. Dearborn

Boyer-Rosene worked carefully with Citadel's move coordinators, the Carter consulting team, and Technical Source, the IT subcontractor to schedule the project. Building protection was a key ingredient, as CIG was one of the first tenant's in this brand new, high-tech building, as was properly protecting the new furnishings which had previously been installed. Many of Citadel's trading workstations include numerous flat-screen monitors which required special care to relocate properly. Citadel has continued to grow since last year's relocation, and Boyer-Rosene has been moving them into new space within the building ever since. Boyer also provided the move into 131 for over 1,000 Bank One employees, and has just been chosen to relocate the Office of the Building for Prime Group to free up additional space for CIG's needs.
